Civility in the Public Arena

Civility, or sometimes the lack of, is what clearly defines a society or a community. How do we treat other people, particularly when there is disagreement or tension? Do we remember the basic humanity of the other person in our actions and in our public discourse, or do we dehumanize and demonize?

With an admirable 30-year record of service as a representative from Iowa in the United States Congress, Jim Leach will share his wisdom and draw from his experience to discuss civility in the public arena.
